“Disaster averted”

Simon Jenkins, Chairman,
National Trust, March 2012

“Now the serious business of planning begins. The country needs huge effort at a local level to get plans in place that properly reflect the integration of social, economic and environmental goals, and protect places people value.”

Fiona Reynolds, Director-General,
National Trust, March 2012

FOR YOU HERE

Welcome to the howmanyhomes.org website.

The website has been set up by a group of professional bodies, trade associations and charities with an interest in planning for housing. The Group came together in 2011 in response to a call from practitioners for practical support in assessing how many homes were needed in their areas in the context of the new housing and planning landscape.

The aim of the Group is to produce a package of support designed by practitioners for practitioners.

Part of this package includes two Excel toolkits. The first is "What Households Where?". This was published last summer for comment. Following feedback a more advanced version has been developed called "What Homes Where?" Both versions are available on the website. This has been done in particular to enable the new unitary authorities created in 2009 to refer back to information relating to the previous local authority areas if they wish which is not available in the advanced toolkit.

These toolkits won't provide you with housing numbers. What they will do is provide you with a
